Beer Bread

3 cups self-rising flour (or substitute 3 cups all purpose flour, 3 tsp baking powder and 1 1/2 tsp salt)
3 tbsp sugar
1 (12-oz) can of beer

Preheat oven to 375°. Lightly grease or spray a 9 x 5 x 3-in. loaf pan with nonstick cooking spray. Combine all ingredients, mixing well. Pour into prepared loaf pan and bake for 1 hour. Makes 1 loaf. www.CooksRecipes.com

Garlic Jelly

1/4 cup garlic cloves, peeled
2 cups distilled white vinegar
5 cups sugar
3-oz. liquid pectin

In food processor or blender, blend garlic and 1/2 cup vinegar together until smooth. In large pot, combine garlic mix, 1 1/2 cups vinegar, and sugar. Bring to a boil, stirring constantly. Add pectin and return to a boil. Boil hard 1 minute, stirring constantly. Remove from heat. Fill sterilized jars with jelly.

Makes about 5 half-pint jars.

Dual 120-volt blower motors inject fast streams of air into 55-gal. steel drum, creating a whirlwind of fire that quickly incinerates ash.

Barnyard Burner Uses Forced Air To Burn Fast

You can burn almost anything with no smoke or smell in this new "Barnyard Burner" that uses forced air to create a hot, smokeless fire.

Dual 120-volt blower motors inject fast streams of air into the 55-gal. steel drum, creating a whirlwind of fire that quickly incinerates trash.

"The spinning fire traps smoke and particles that would otherwise escape, reburning them in the intense flame," says Jeremy Pretzsch of Elastec/American Marine, the manufacturer of The Barnyard Burner. "As a result, a completely smokeless fire is produced, and burning becomes a clean, fast process. A deflector keeps smoke and ash from leaving the barrel, while hot air can escape from the unit's vent stack."

Any burnable waste can be eliminated in this way, from filters to oily rags, waste oil containers, feed and seed sacks or unwanted paper products.

Besides, no flying debris can escape from the barrel, so you don't need to stay and supervise the burn, and once the fire goes out, there are no adverse effects of the fans running until you return to shut the unit off.

According to Pretzsch, the Barnyard Burner's design has been in use for the past 10 years in the oil industry. It was just scaled down to make the new farm-sized unit, which sells for $599 plus shipping.

GPS Keeps Track Of Pets

Wandering pets can be tracked at all times by this new GPS device that simply clips onto their collars. But you'll only want to put it on a valuable animal since, at $349, it's not cheap.

The device consists of a 3 1/2-in. long transmitter that sends location updates

Transmitter clips onto dog's collar and sends location updates every few seconds to whatever receiver you choose, ever receiver you choose.

whether it be your mobile phone, pager, PDA or computer (in text or map form). The information can even be simultaneously sent to more than one person.

"Globalpetfinder has incorporated the latest technology in advanced antennae systems to ensure the best performance, even in heavily wooded conditions," according to Globalpetfinder CEO Jennifer Durst. "If, for some reason, the device is temporarily unable to get a satellite 'lock,' it will continue to search until it does, and you will always know where your pet was last."

You can set boundaries for your pet, so that you're sent an alarm if the animal strays too far.

The unit is protected by a sealed, water-resistant, durable case and operates on three rechargeable AAA batteries. It's programmed to alert you when it's time to recharge.

Globalpetfinder is available exclusively on the company's website.

One-Strap Bib Overalls

Jon Dana, a farmer in Mo., hated his bib overalls. He hated how one strap always fell down. He hated that he could never find his cell phone, which was usually at the bottom of his full pockets. And he hated that the waist adjustment was a button that either fit or didn't.

That's why he and his wife created the first pair of "Unibib" overalls in Sept. 2004. They have only one strap, a front pocket for the cell phone, a hammer loop, and tool pockets.

Jon's motto was that he wanted them to fit like jeans, stay up like bibs, and have pockets that fit the things he wanted to carry.

Now, son-in-law Mark Corwin runs Usi Clothing with that in mind. "The look of them attracts the attention but it's what they'll do for you that makes them great. We're not selling fashion," he says.

High quality velcro is the key to the single- "Unibib" overalls have strap bib overalls, thanks to the velcro pocket only one strap. covers and one adjustable velcro strap on the waist. It also has a standard zipper fly.

Men's camouflage bib overalls are available for hunters with button-down pockets instead of velcro. "If you're hunting, you don't want to pull up a pocket with velcro and scare off whatever game you're hunting," Corwin notes.

The left and right handed brush and blue jean overalls come in mens and womens sizes. Because the velcro adjusts for two sizes, a guy needing a size 38 would order a size 38 to 40.

With straps fastened, the bib overalls are machine washable.

In early 2005, they will sell "kid size" bib overalls. Eventually, they will also sell white painter pants.

The denim bib overalls sell for $40 including S&H. Camouflage bib overalls sell for $50 including S&H.

Fork + Knife = Knork

For many of us, it's habit. We have the fork in our hand and the meat is in front of us. And so we saw through the meat with our fork.

Now Mike Miller's made the task easier by inventing the Knork, a stainless steel fork with table knife edges on both sides and a "finger platform" which makes pressing on it painless.

It's not sharp enough to cut the user but with a bit of hand rocking motion, it'll cut steak. "It'll show you how good a quality steak is," Miller says.

Fork has table knife edges on both sides and a "finger platform" which helps apply pressure.

Parents like having young kids use the Knork and Miller says kids love them. The blind, those who have arthritis, or stroke victims who can only use one arm like Knorks because it's one utensil that functions as two. Miller says some even take it with them to restaurants.

A single Knork sells for $6.49 plus S&H while a 4 pack sells for $24.95. Knorks come in reusable plastic and sets.
